

Homeschool Educational Resources

NOTE: This resource sheet has been produced in response to requests for curricula source assistance from new home educators. NICHE does not endorse any individual resource and we encourage you to search diligently to find the curricula materials that meet the academic and theological/philosophical perspectives of your own family. Be sure to allow sufficient time before the beginning of your school year to request catalogs, check online sources, review the materials, order the curricula, and allow for the delivery of the materials. (This can take anywhere from 6-12 weeks.)

Traditional Textbook Publishers

These resources fall under what is considered a traditional teacher-instructional program — using textbooks, teacher’s guides, tests, and additional materials. They usually follow a traditional scope and sequence through a 180-day academic year. Textbook publishers assume that your school structure will be similar to an institutional school.

Worktext Publishers

These resources present curricula programs in a consumable workbook format. Like traditional textbooks, they usually follow a scope and sequence through a 180-day academic year. Minimal teacher preparation is required, and the worktexts often include numerous tests and checkpoints to ensure mastery of the material content.

Unit Study Publishers

These resources utilize a unit study approach to home education — building upon a theme or topic while integrating reading, language arts, science, social studies, math, and fine arts, as they apply. Advantages include flexibility and subject & grade level integration. Disadvantages can include extra preparation time. Here are a few examples:
